Warns Against German Plan To Re-Arm

Speaking to the New England Division of the American Jewish Congress at Boston, Mass., Dr. Maurice L. Perle, Special Representative in International Affairs of the World Jewish Congress, drew attention to grave implications of the disclosure through the investigations of American newspapermen that Dr. Konrad Adenauer, Chancellor of the West German State, has been in secret consultation with an organization of former regular officers of the Reichswehr on the rearmament of Germany. This Brotherhood (Bruderschaft) of officers, ostensibly organized for social and welfare problems, it has been disclosed, had prepared a memorandum, presented by the former Nazi General, Kurt von Manteuffel, in which the Chancellor was advised that a division of infantry troops should be constituted by the middle of this year and an armored division by 1951. The Chancellor was urged at the same time by these officers to take up the public attitude that Germany was not seeking remilitarization.

"There could be no greater act of political folly than to acquiesce in this development on the simple minded assumption that a re-armed Germany would be a barrier to Soviet expansion," Dr. Perle said. "West and East alike are in error in competing for German support and favour. This competition can only result in hastening the re-emergence of German military power which both parties to the present diplomatic conflict will have reason to regret. There have been attempts to appease German ambition and to make alliance with German strength. The

Release Of Iraqi Jews Upsets Entry Plans

Israel's immigration program for 1950 has been completely dislocated by the announcement from Baghdad that the Government is allowing Iraqi Jews to leave the country within one year. The budget of the Jewish Agency provided for the reception of 150,000 immigrants in 1950. There are between 100,000 and 150,000 Jews in Iraq and the majority are expected to migrate.

Current plans provided for the entry of 50,000 from the Arab states and 50,000 from countries behind the Iron Curtain, both of which categories were considered to have priority due to time limitations or dangers to the lives of Jews. The balance were "pressure cases" from North Africa and Western Europe.

The Israeli Government and the Jewish Agency are now confronted with the problem of raising funds to expand the program or to cut down immigration from North Africa and Western Europe. Absorption of Iraqi Jews will be difficult. According to information at Tel Aviv, the 30,000 family heads include 12,000 small artisans and storekeepers, 8,500 unskilled workers, 8,000 office workers, 2,500 wholesale traders and 1,000 professionals.

fruit of all these efforts has invariably been disastrous for those who have made them.

"The Kaiser, the Weimar Republic and Hitler had this in common, that they existed by virtue of their readiness to implement the policies of the German General Staff, which for a century has

Ran Vigilant One-Man Drive For N.Y. Reforms

Paul Moss, who conducted a one-man campaign against improper theatrical productions while he was Commissioner of Licenses in the administration of Mayor La Guardia, died in New York at the Medical Arts Center Hospital, 87 West Fifty-seventh Street. He was 70 years old. Mr. Moss was stricken with a cerebral hemorrhage in his office at the City Center of Music and Drama of which he was managing director. He was taken to the hospital, where it was at first believed that he would recover.

As Commissioner of Licenses, Mr. Moss rang down the curtain on the old-fashioned type of burlesque show in New York. With the exception of this form of amusement, Mr. Moss took action that resulted in the closing of only two New York shows—"Wine, Women and Song" in 1942, and "Trio" in 1945.

Mr. Moss preferred, however, to stress his record in the Humanitarian Is Still Active At 90

Samuel S. Fels, distinguished Philadelphia industrialist and philanthropist, reached his ninetieth birthday with the firm conviction that the world, in spite of cold wars and atomic weapons, was "on the road to better things."

Mr. Fels, a shy and modest man who is reputed to have given more than $40,000,000 to the cause of humanity during the last half century, ignored his birthday as much as his friends would permit.

Taking the milestone in stride, he reported for work at 10 a.m., as usual, at the Fels Naptha Soap Company, of which he has been president since 1914. In keeping with his desire, there was no public recognition of the occasion, but he did agree to have luncheon with a few of the close friends who came to his modestly furnished office during the morning to shake his hand.

"I never liked birthdays," he said during an interview with the New York Times. Then, with a merry twinkle in his eyes, he recalled that he was classified sixty years ago as a doubtful physical risk for life insurance. The noted benefactor, whose contributions to Philadelphia include the Fels Planetarium at the Franklin Institute, attributes his present "excellent" physical condition to this formula: "Keep busy. Don't rush. Be moderate, especially in eating and drinking. Keep an open mind. And don't worry."

Since the turn of the century, Mr. Fels has been deeply interested in world affairs. "I've never known a time," he said, "when there wasn't trouble and I don't think the present time is any worse than those of the past. The questions of the day will sooner or later resolve themselves."

"Our cause today, democracy, is the cause of the future."

Z.O.A. Head Leaves Letter On Unity

Daniel Frisch, president of the Zionist Organization of America, the most influential body in the General Zionist movement, died early Tuesday, March 7, at the Columbia - Presbyterian Medical Center, where he had undergone an operation the day before. He was 52 years old. His home was at 300 Central Park West, New York. Despite serious ailments, he was active in Zionist projects until his admission into the hospital the week before last. He was elected president last May as a compromise candidate, healing the breach between two factions which had differed sharply on Zionist policies.

Mr. Frisch was aware of the serious nature of his illness and immediately before undergoing his operation, he dictated the following letter for transmission to Zionist leaders throughout the nation: "You might find it rather strange that one who, like myself, is facing an unavoidable major operation, should dictate from his hospital bed a letter to his friends—but strange things do happen in life."

"I trust you will believe me when, standing at the crossroads of life in more than one sense, I tell you I am convinced that a strong Z. O. A. and a vigorous General Zionism (not Zionism in general) are as indispensable today to the welfare and growth of Israel, both as a state and as a people, as they have been."

"During the nine months of my presidency, I have given the Z. O. A. and the Zionist movement my very all. I have tried to manage the affairs of the Z. O. A. without regard to past policies or any attempt to settle old accounts. I have tried to do my very best. I think I have earned the right to call on you to carry on."

BOY, 16, WINS $2,800 WESTINGHOUSE SCIENCE PRIZE

Saul Herbert Sternberg, 16 years old, of 246 East Gunhill Road, the Bronx, New York, a senior at the High School of Music and Art, whose father is principal of Public School 611, won the $2,800 Westinghouse grand science scholarship.

He plans to attend Swarthmore College to prepare for a career as a theoretical physicist. His top-ranking project among forty in the contest was "The very careful measurement of the tracks made by helium atoms across a photographic plate."

His mathematical and photographic study of a specific nuclear reaction, young Sternberg said in his essay, may have "added another bit to the great mass of evidence released by cyclotron bombardment of the nonfissionable helium atoms."

The helium was produced when the element boron was bombarded with neutrons. It was explained that "Saul used photographic plates impregnated with boron, then persuaded Washington University at St. Louis to bombard them with neutrons in their cyclotron."

National chairman of the Committee on Public Information, said that Mr. Browdy will continue in that post until the next convention, scheduled to be held on the July 4 weekend in Chicago. Mr. Browdy, however,

Mr. La Guardia is the "many other fields that came under the jurisdiction of his department, according to the New York Times."

He took special satisfaction in his newstand and juvenile-movie-reformers effected in cooperation with the Mayor. When he assumed office on Jan. 18, 1934, Mr. Moss charged that the valuable newstand licenses were not always apportioned first among disabled veterans, but sometimes went to persons with influence at Tammany Hall.

Mr. Moss and Mr. La Guardia saw to it that applications of deserving veterans no longer gathered dust. And in 1941 Mr. Moss had a law passed permitting news booths, which enabled the vendors to obtain some shelter from rain and snow.

Before Mr. Moss' regime unaccompanied children were not permitted in motion-picture theatres. The practice was for them to wait outside until some adult came along and took them in. In 1936 the Commissioner had a law passed allowing them in, provided they sat in a separate section, with a matron in attendance.

In his fighting administration Mr. Moss clamped down upon vendors of "obscene" magazines and racing "tip" sheets, games of chance at Coney Island, junk shops which bought from children under 18, pin-ball machine distributors, ice companies doing a short-weight business, sidewalk photographers, fraudulent used-car dealers, theatre booking agents and employment agencies engaging in sharp practices.

After his retirement from the License Department on Jan. 31, 1948, Mr. Moss became managing director of the City Center, where he had been unsalaried assistant to the president since 1944, and took an important part in the presentation of its low-cost drama, ballet and symphonic offerings.

The son of Albert and Rose Schwartzwald Moss, Mr. Moss was reared in New York. As a youngster he was part of a vaudeville team known as Clark and Williams, blackface singers and dancers.

The lure of a steady salary led him into the commercial world. Many years later, in association with his brother, B. S. Moss, a pioneer in the movie industry, he produced early five-reelers and afterward operated many vaudeville and picture playhouses in this city.

He was associated with the Theatre Guild in its early years. With Warren Munsell of the Theatre Guild, he produced a play, "The Mongrel," starring Rudolph Schildkrant. Then, with the Neighborhood Playhouse, he was co-producer.

provided we and the other democratic nations stay alert—and well-armed. My own observation is that the mere power to resort to arms is often sufficient to maintain peace. Eventually I think the United Nations will keep the world at peace."

At four score and ten Mr. Fels still maintains an unflagging interest in medical and scientific research, music, literature and art. However, he has grown somewhat hard of hearing and does not go often to his favorite concerts.

"I find that I have very few days in which I have to yawn," he commented.

Humanitarianism has been his outstanding characteristic. Three years before President Roosevelt's New Deal he published "This Changing World" on the thesis that Government supervision of working hours, wages and profits was necessary in private employment. Even before that he had made his own factory a model of work conditions.

Mr. Fels founded the Crime Prevention Association of Philadelphia and, in 1935, established the Samuel S. Fels fund, which aids research at Temple University, Antioch College and the University of Pennsylvania, Chicago and North Carolina. In 1948 he received the Philadelphia Award.

To reach Mr. Fels it was necessary to travel through miles of Philadelphia's old-fashioned streets. Then there was an old-fashioned brick building. Stepping through the door of that building was like stepping into the last century. The heavy woodwork, the furniture and the general atmosphere all reflected an earlier day in offices.

Mr. Fels was found in a severe office in one corner of the building. There were two decorations which stood out in the room. Behind the small man at the desk was a large photograph of his thirty acres of soap factory which smoked and bubbled away just across the street from his office. The other decoration was a large bust of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Fels was in a chuckling and affable mood. He smoked a cigar and rubbed his stubbly chin whiskers. He could not understand, he said, why all the fuss was being made over him just because he was ninety years old.

"I don't see why I am supposed to know a great deal more at ninety than I did at eighty-seven or eighty-nine," he said. It was explained to him that when a man reaches ninety it is generally believed that he should be in a position to give other men a recipe for health and success. He chuckled and said, "I don't take much whisky because I don't like it. I smoke

The honoree wore a taffeta print dress, designed with a high round neckline, short sleeves, and a full skirt, and a corsage of red carnations. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. The table was decorated with a birthday cake trimmed with red roses, and a centerpiece of spring flowers.

Arthur Jack, son of Mr. and Mrs. Israel Seligman, City Hall Avenue, was called to the Reading of the Law at Beth Itzhak Synagogue. He is the brother of Mona and Linda; and grandson of H. Seligman, Clark Street. Kiddush followed the ceremony. The following evening, one hundred and sixty guests were received at a dinner at Chevra Shas Synagogue. Mrs. Seligman wore a blue satin dinner-gown, fashioned with a draped neckline, with a corsage of Tulleman roses. Youngsters are intensely curious and love nothing better than to experiment with knives, razor blades, ice picks, matches and rat poison. Because of this very natural curiosity, parents should see that such dangerous items are kept out of reach or, better still, looked away. Blunt, small scissors with rounded ends are best for children's cut-out games. Safety in the home is an important practice. More accidents occur in the home than any place else.

BRONFIN-SPERBER

The marriage of Miss Evelyn Jean Sperber, daughter of Marcus M. Sperber, K. C., and Mrs. Sperber, 4402 Western Avenue, to Dr. Gerald J. Bronfin, son of Mrs. I. D. Bronfin, of Denver, Colorado, and of the late Dr. I. D. Bronfin, took place on Monday, February 27, at five o'clock, at the Montefiore Club. Rabbi Solomon Frank officiated, assisted by Rev. S. Kastner. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white satin, fashioned with a fitted bodice, bateau neckline, edged with tiny flowers of silver lame, and long, tight sleeves, it had a skirt showing an underskirt of satin, trimmed with applied silver flowers, and falling into a long train. She had a bandeau of silver lame, and a fingertip-length double veil of tulle illusion, and carried a small bouquet of white tulips and freesia. Miss Louise Sperber, sister of the bride, was maid of honour, wearing a long dress of dark brown chiffon, designed with a fitted bodice, with plunging neckline, and short sleeves; and a stole of flesh-colored tulle. She had a picture hat of matching chiffon, and carried a bouquet of Talisman roses. Henry Winters, of Denver, was best man. The room was decorated with white snapdragons, stock, sweet-peas, freesia, and carnations; and wedding music was played for the ceremony. A reception was held, with buffet table service. Mrs. Sperber, mother of the bride, wore a gown of mist-grey net over matching crepe, the bodice being designed with tiny pin tucks; and the skirt, in sunburst pleats, and appliqued with mauve, grey, and yellow irises. Her hat was made of iris petals to match. Mrs. Bronfin, mother of the groom, wore a gown of navy-blue lace, trimmed with pink flowers, with a hat made of pink flowers, and had a corsage of mauve orchids. Dr. and Mrs. Bronfin left for Colorado Springs, Col., for their wedding trip, and will reside in Denver. For travelling, the bride wore a coral-brown wool suit, with a brown seal'skin coat, a Paisley hat, and corsage bouquet of white gardenias.

JOSPE-RIPESTEIN

The marriage of Miss Miriam Pearl Ripstein, youngest daughter of Mrs. H. M. Ripstein, 4402 Western Avenue, to Jack David Jospe, son of Mrs. Joseph Jospe, 4970 Queen Mary Road, and the late Mr. Jospe, took place on Sunday, February 28, at four o'clock, in the chapel of Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, Rabbi Wilfred Shuchat officiating, assisted by Cantor Nathan Mendelson. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Dr. Charles E. Ripstein, of New York. She wore a princess gown of white silk faille, made with a low, deep, portrait neckline, in capelet effect, with cap sleeves, and floor-length skirt. She had a lace cap with a hip-length veil of tulle illusion, and long, white gloves, and carried a Bible, decorated with streamers of white carnations. Mrs. Max Crestohl, sister of the bride, was matron of honour. Her gown was of royal-blue Chantilly lace, having a low, square-cut neckline, with cap sleeves, and ankle-length skirt. Her matching lace bonnet was trimmed on top with pink petals, and had streamers of matching blue tulle in back. She carried a nosegay of spring flowers. A call to all Orthodox Jews throughout the United States to "mobilize under the banner of Agudath Israel to fight for Torah-Judaism" was issued by the Agdath Israel of America, at New York. Agudath Israel is a worldwide movement founded in 1912 for the purpose of organizing religious Jews for militant work on behalf of an uncompromising Religious Bloc.Torah-loyal stand toward all Jewish problems. Although the second world war greatly decimated its ranks, since the bulk of the Agdath membership was in Poland, the organization counts over 200
members in Israel, Europe, North America and South America.
Agudath Israel is a member of the coalition government in Israel through its representatives on the Religious Bloc.MEET YOUR FRIENDS AT

More than $250,000 worth of authentic kosher Israel wines were sent to the United States in preparation for the Passover holidays, it was announced by the Economic Department of the Jewish Agency, in New York. Included in the shipments, some of which have already reached the U.S., are red and white wines from the Middle East's oldest and best known vineyards. Israel is cultivating more than 4,000 acres in vineyards, and is producing about a million and a half gallons annually of all popular wine types, including Alicante, Malaga, Muscat, Tokay and Port, from seeds originally transplanted from their native soils. The bulk of Israel's wines come from the Vigneronne des Grande Caves Richon le-Zion et Zichron Jacob, the giant cooperative founded by Baron Edmond de Rothschild in 1880, which operates the second largest wine caves in the world.

The Black Panther

By RUDOLPH NASSAUER

On one side of the Tiber stands the school. Behind this building begins the series network of narrow streets, the Jewish Ghetto. At night the cobbled pavements, the lamp-posts, the open doors and the low archways, which work themselves like subterranean ducts through the quarter, look unreal, like scenery back-stage. Were one to cross the Ghetto in unbroken silence these aspects would affect a certain charm. But the mattress with a sleeper in front of a doorway, occasional cries and groans which the night accentuates, the smell-laden air that rises from the myriad corners of this quarter paralysed with poverty, quickly rid the visitor of any notion of fantasy.

The first newspaper to hear about the "Black Panther" immediately sent its reporter to get the full story. He arrived in Rome laden with documents for the purpose of securing access to the various officials who had handled the case. But for some reason the case was hushed up. Nobody was willing to disclose any information. He could get no satisfaction from official sources. The Ghetto was the obvious place in which to gather information.

He arrived there late in the afternoon. He had been given directions to walk along the Tiber and turn left when he came to the synagogue. The river-level was low and glistening stones protruded from the grey water. His grey face foaming with sweat, he turned into the Ghetto. A sudden silence broke out, comparable to the silence that follows a careless remark. The dusk-lit street was empty, but by the time he had realised this, he had already adjusted his tie and coat as if he were preparing to meet someone. Then he espied a coloured marble that was rolling slowly to a stop on the smooth pavement. Tracing back its probable path he discovered a child crouched against a house wall, camouflaging itself with the shadow of a lamp-post. And then, as if looking at the night sky and discerning star after star, he found about a dozen children crouching shyly against houses on either side of the road. He said "good evening" to the first one, then moved his head towards each one in turn to greet them. Only one little girl, with forefinger between her teeth, murmured a reply and he noticed how the others had fixed the little creature with their stare. He picked up the marble and brought it to the girl who had greeted him. She took it, looked quickly at the others, and darted away through one of the archways. The others followed. The reporter, who had intended to glean a speck of information from one of the children, was a little annoyed at their abrupt disappearance.

In contrast to the children, older people took no notice of the reporter. Many of them were now trickling into the street carrying chairs in order to sit down and enjoy the cool evening air. He smiled at an old, bearded Jew who had made himself comfortable in front of his dwelling. The old man greeted him and the reporter started conversation. When the old man found out the reporter's nationality, he called to his son through the open window. The young man appeared and anxiously offered his services as interpreter.

So the story is true, thought the reporter as the son verified fact after fact. Mussolini (he said) had left them alone. But when the Germans had arrived they all had to flee or be deported. The fate of the German and Polish Jews had long ago come to their ears and they had for some considerable time made arrangements to save themselves should need arise. They had elected one man, who, with forged papers, was to stay behind to look after their homes and belongings which they could ill afford to lose. They had chosen the innkeeper and he and his family, when the others had ultimately fled, remained. The plan had worked well for some time and then suddenly the Germans arrested about 500 Jews who had hidden themselves in the most outlandish places. Someone had given them away. Some 50 people had returned after the war and those, together with Jews who had drifted in from Eastern Europe, had gradually healed the wound with live tissue. Only the scar remained.

When the young man finished the reporter was by no means satisfied.

"Who", he asked, "was the Black Panther?"

"A girl with black hair."

"And where is she now? What has happened to her?"

The young man looked at his father who nodded approvingly as his son shrugged his shoulders. The interview was over. There was no more to be said. The reporter thanked the old man and his son and continued down the road which now had an atmosphere of a street filled with spectators awaiting some solemn procession.

People were filling into the inn. The tables outside were all occupied. Everybody appeared to know everybody else. The reporter found a place and ordered wine. It was easy for him to fall into conversation with the proprietor. The latter was making a round of the tables, sitting down at each one for a few minutes to chat. He spoke in a low, gentle tone, bending forward in rhythm with his speech which gave him the air of a conspirator. Eventually he arrived at the reporter's table. He sat down.

"Inglese?"

The reporter nodded.
"Rome a nice place."
"Vary."

After this short introduction there was an embarrassing silence which was soon broken by the proprietor's greeting to a newly-arrived customer.

"Tourist?" he asked.
"No. Not quite. Reporter. London newspaper."

"Ah. Reporter. I understand."
"Trying to find out all about The Black Panther?"

The reporter was prepared for some sign of reaction on the man's face. But the proprietor remained quite calm, in fact, he acted as if the remark had been of the slightest kind. He looked round and gave a girl orders to attend to a newly arrived customer. Then he turned back to the reporter.

"Ah, yes," was all he said.
This casual reply gave the reporter the impression that he had to make himself clear, that the proprietor did not know enough English to have understood him. He tried to remodel his sentences into more simple form.

"I", he pointed at himself, "to write story about Black..."

"Oh, I understand. You are reporter. You want to write a story of Black Panther. Oh, I understand you, perfectly". Then he repeated, playing for time, as it were, almost inaudibly: "perfectly."

"Tell me", he said, "why want you to know all about Black Panther?"

"Well, it's a rather good story, a most unusual story."

"Unusual". The older man thought about the meaning of this word for some time, murmuring it repeatedly in English and Italian until he appeared to have gathered its import. "You want to write story of a traitor, no?"

"Well, I suppose so. If someone gives away his own people to the enemy, one calls him a traitor."

"Traitor. You think so?"

By now the reporter, quite unwittingly, had roused the old man to speak.

"Well, I will tell you the real story of Black Panther. She had beautiful hair, black hair. That's why they called her the Black Panther. Her mother's hair." His meagre vocabulary was amply aided by constant gesticulations. The proprietor repeated the story of the old man's son, though in greater detail, and then he continued: "We had it very bad. Everybody has left and the Germans come and ask where everybody is gone. 'Don't know,' we all say. 'One morning everybody gone.' Germans then leave us alone. Good papers we have, false. Me too old for war and my girls, young children; my sons, gone with the others, and wife. Daughters look after me and inn, you understand?"

The reporter nodded and took his notebook from out of his pocket. The old man put his hand on the reporter's.

"No, no good story. Bad story. Why? Listen. Don't write. Listen. Bad for newspaper. No write. Black Panther, beautiful girl. One night Germans at her, to love, you understand?"

He went on to describe that night. The Black Panther was working at the inn when two Germans entered and took her sister upstairs. Being busy in the crowded tavern, he did not at first notice their disappearance. When he did, he suddenly remembered that he had seen them go upstairs with two soldiers. He rushed to the bedrooms and drove one of the Germans away. But when he came to the other room it was too late. . . . The German was unprepared and the old innkeeper stabbed him in the back. Then, drunk with fright, he hid himself in the house. When customers downstairs noticed that there was no-one to serve them, there was great commotion and soon soldiers, like disturbed ants, crawled searching over the whole house.

The Black Panther was carried to prison. Thorough investigations were directed against her and her family and it was discovered that they were Jews. Then the Germans bargained with her. They were willing to spare her father's, her sister's and her own life if she revealed the whereabouts of the Jews missing from the Ghetto. The final interrogation lasted for three days and nights. By the end of it the Black Panther gave up. Sometimes mountaineers on expeditions in high altitudes reach a certain height and just sit down and give up. Somehow they no longer see the point in climbing on. The Germans had succeeded.

"My wife", the sad innkeeper continued, "my sons, five hundred Jews, all dead. Black Panther: innocent. No traitor. Three days, three nights, torture. Brave Black Panther. No write story. People no understand. People no know."

It was late evening by the time the innkeeper had finished his story. The little square was alive with people who had waited all three or four cigars a day. I cut out smoking for a while once to see if it was hurting me, and I couldn't see any difference, so I started again."

Mr. Fels started selling soap so long ago that he is a little hazy about his early work in the company. His father and brother started the factory and he started work with them when he was sixteen. The company grew and continued to grow. Mr. Fels found himself with millions of dollars and he started giving lots of it away. He became a heavy contributor to peace groups, Jewish charities, medical and scientific research.

"I regard research as almost a spiritual thing," he said. "Anything you do to help the other fellow has that feeling about it and it means digging for the truth."

Z.O.A. HEAD

Time and again during his presidency, Mr. Frisch assumed a militant stand on major questions affecting the future of the General Zionist movement, which has as one of its strong characteristics private investment in Israel. Frequently, he urged widespread support of the United Jewish Appeal campaign.

Immediately after his election as president, he went to Israel, where he concluded an agreement with the Jewish Agency for Palestine and the World Confederation of General Zionists for the financing of projects in Israel and the establishment of the first two Z.O.A. colonies there. He returned from Israel last month after a six-week visit during which he consulted with Israeli officials on Zionist problems. While there he broke ground for the erection of the Z. O. A. house in Tel Aviv. The ceremonies were attended by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, United States Ambassador James G. McDonald, and Zionist leaders.

Before entering the hospital, Mr. Frisch reported at a special meeting of the National Administrative Council, the ruling body of the Z. O. A. between conventions, at which the members unanimously endorsed his policies. Several months ago he issued a program which called for a drastic revision in Hebrew education and at the same time he presented a comprehensive plan for the democratization of the Jewish community.

His program, titled "Program for Action," calling for work in Israel and for cultural survival on the American Jewish scene, was adopted by the Council and sent to the National Executive Committee.

Born in Palestine, he was the son of Rabbi Eliezer and Haia Landau Frisch. The family moved to Targu Frumos, Rumania, when he was a year old. From early childhood until his death, he was an active worker in the Zionist movement. During his career, he made fourteen trips to Palestine.

day for the bracing air.

"But where", said the reporter, still unsatisfied, "is the Black Panther now?"

The old man, as if he had not heard, turned round. Then he pointed to a haggard woman with white hair.

"There. There Black Panther."

The silence which in the Ghetto had ensued in spite of human voices accompanied the reporter on his way back to the hotel. The shock of seeing the Black Panther had settled on him and his imagination granted him no respite. He realised that such truth could not be fashioned into words and he decided to pass the Ghetto by, like the Tiber.

This story is from Jewish Affairs.

He came to the U.S. in 1921 and settled in Indianapolis, Indiana. Soon after his arrival, he became head of a large salvage firm and also became an investment broker. Under the title of "Thoughts of a Layman", he wrote numerous articles on the philosophy and organizational problems of the Zionist movement. He was a founder of the Indianapolis Zionist district and later was elected president of the Ohio Valley Zionist Region. He retired from business five years ago and moved to New York.

Mr. Frisch attended most of the World Zionist Congresses abroad during the last two decades. He was elected a member of the National Z. O. A. Administrative Council in 1934, and later became its chairman.

Surviving are his widow, the former Miss Tillie Dobrovitz; a daughter, Mrs. Marvin Bacaner, of Boston, Mass.; and a son, Lazar, a student at the University of California.

ducer of "The Grand Street Folies."

With Marcus Heiman, later president of the League of New York Theatres, Mr. Moss produced the hit thriller, "Subway Express," in which Edward Ellis and Dorothy Peterson starred. Subsequently, with Maurice Wertheim of the Theatre Guild, the partners produced Noel Coward's "This Was A Man," with Francine Larrimore, A. E. Matthews and Nigel Bruce and directed by Basil Dean.

After serving as business manager at Fusion Headquarters in 1933, Mr. Moss received his appointment as Commissioner of Licenses from Mayor La Guardia. On completion of his service, Mr. Moss pointed out that under his administration the department had turned in receipts each year $400,000 higher than the 1933 mark.

He was a member of the City Athletic Club and the Lambs and of many fraternal organizations. His home was at the Park Chambers Hotel, 68 W. Fifty-eighth St.

Mr. Moss, who was not married, was one of a family of seven. The surviving brothers and sisters are, B. S. Moss, and Moses J. Moss, of New York; Louis Moss, of Beverly Hills, Calif.; and Mrs. Etta Platto and Mrs. Rae Trilling of New York.

Newbold Morris, former president of the City Council and chairman of the board of the City Center, paid the following tribute to Mr. Moss:

"The death of Paul Moss is a cause of deep distress to all who worked with him in the LaGuardia administration and to his associates on the board of directors of the City Center. His loyalty, modesty and devotion to duty were an inspiration."

been the real government of Germany," he continued. "The desire to destroy the German General Staff was one of the declared principal objectives of the war. Today it has taken on a new lease of life under the guise of a 'Bruderschart', and unless it is dispersed by resolute action, a new factor of far-reaching and sinister significance will enter the life of Europe again."
